TRANSLATOR'S NOTE: THESE ARE DIFFERENT FROM THE ORIGINAL TRANSLATION, BUT ARE MORE CORRECT. SOURCE:

I found a Yiddish storybook between two broken barrels in the hou which once belonged to Velvel the barrelmaker. I sit there, the last of tl demons. I eat dust. I sleep on a feather duster. I keep on readir gibberish. The style of the book is in our manner. Sabbath puddi cooked in pig's fat, blasphemy rolled in piety. The moral of the book i neither judge, nor judgment. But nevertheless the letters are Jewish. Tl alphabet they could not squander. I suck on the letters and feed myself count the words, make rhymes, and tortuously interpret and reinterpr each dot.

Aleph, the abyss, what else wanted?
Beth, the blow, long since fated.
Gimel, God, pretending He knew,
Daleth, death, its shadow grew.
Hal, the hangman, he stood prepared,
Vav, wisdom, ignorance bared.
Zayeen, the zodiac, signs distantly loomed,
Chet, the child, prenatally doomed.
Tet, the thinker, an imprisoned lord,
Yud, the judge, the verdict a fraud.
